Planning History: cumulative index

vol. 10 no. 1 (1988) - vol. 20 no. 3 (1998)

Introduction

Information scientists would say that, no matter how good the content of a journal, it is useless unless it can be retrieved at will. Normally this means some form of annual or cumulative index. The newsletter of the former Planning History Group, the Planning History Bulletin, was indexed by Dennis Hardy in 1988 (vol. 10 no. 1). A decade later, the society has developed into the International Planning History Society with a membership in excess of 400; the Bulletin has expanded and been reconstituted at the journal Planning History; a decade has passed and it seems appropriate to celebrate 20 years of planning history publications with a second decadal index. This is more appropriate as we enter the third decade making gradual changes to the journal; slowly increasing the number of pages, introducing a refereeing procedure for the majority of papers, carrying somewhat longer papers, and now publication reviews; all to complement the range of activities of the Society and of its allied academic refereed journal, Planning Perspectives. Nevertheless, IPHS Council still sees an important function of Planning History as carrying ephemera: news of activities of the Society and of its affiliates; commentaries on publications, conference reports and so on. This will continue; but, by their very nature, such items are not recorded in this index of the more substantive contents of the journal. Here, only main papers and significant research notes are included.

This index is arranged in three main sections. Part 1 lists the main contents of each issue. Part 2 is an alphabetical listing of authors. Part 3 is a simple key word index, allowing major topics, people and places to be sought. This multiple index should make the journal's contents much more accessible to all users.

THE INTERNATIONAL PLANNING HISTORY SOCIETY

- endeavours to foster the study of planning history. It seeks to advance scholarship in the fields of history, planning and the environment, particularly focusing on industrial and post-industrial cities. In pursuit of these aims its interests are worldwide;
- welcomes members from both academic disciplines and the professions of the built environment. Membership of the Society is both multi-disciplinary and practice-oriented;
- encourages and gives support to networks, which may be interest-based, region- or nation-based, working in the fields of planning history;
- provides services for members: publishing a journal, promoting conferences, and providing an international framework for informal individual member contact;
- invites national organisations, whose work is relevant to IPHS, to affiliate status;
- administers its affairs through an elected Council and Management Board.

The Society was inaugurated in January 1993 as a successor body to the Planning History Society, founded in 1974. Its membership is drawn from several disciplines: planning, architecture, economic and social history, geography, sociology, politics and related fields. Membership is open to all who have a working interest in planning history. The Society for American City and Regional Planning History (SACRPH) and the Urban History Association (UHA) are American affiliates of IPHS.

Members of IPHS elect a governing Council every two years. In turn, the Council elects an executive Board of Management, complemented by representatives of SACRPH and UHA. The President chairs the Board and Council.
